THE GUARDIAN
16 November 1968

No more Guardian

Frank Akutowicz, Wilmington, Del.: I don't want the Guardian any more. It no longer contains news or new ideas. It has developed a semi-literate, bloated, throw-away style that isn't worth reading carefully. The Guardian has become the kind of journalistic equivalent of painting highway overpasses with day-glo paint.

The Guardian actually antagonizes far more people than it rallies to its support. You are actually doing the FBI's and CIA's job for them free of charge. The provocative contrariness you promote keeps the citizenry from getting jaded and bored with Vietnam. So in your own small way you keep the war going.
